Our Promise

words by DAVIS SMITH, Founder and CEO

When I was four years old, my family moved to the developing world. We didn't have a lot of money, but we often found ourselves involved in projects that allowed us to help those in need.

CAMPING WITH

THE SCOUTS

OF COTOPAXI.

THE SMITHS

GEAR UP FOR

THEIR NEXT

ADVENTURE.

Our new home also provided me with the opportunity to pursue my passion for the outdoors—backpacking through the Andes, floating down the Amazon on a self-made raft, and camping on uninhabited islands. These experiences shaped me, and ultimately led me to start Cotopaxi.

Our company's slogan, Gear For Good, is a two-part promise. The first part of the promise says our gear will last for good. We are committed to using high-quality materials and craftsmanship, and we back our products with a 61-year warranty (sixty-one years is the average lifespan of a person living in the developing world). Second, we are committed to using our company to do good. We use our profits to support poverty alleviation, we employ refugees, our team volunteers regularly in our local community, and we use our purchasing power to positively impact people throughout our supply chain.

It's just the beginning, but we're excited to continue growing this collective force for good.

Through travel, adventure, volunteering, and events, we can make a change for the better. Join us!

Introducing the Cotopaxi Field Store—think pop-up shop on wheels, content-creating tour bus, and llama lounge wrapped in one mobile pod. As you read these words, our new rig is out rambling across the country, bringing the good times (and gear) to a Questival near you. “The mobile retail tour introduces an enhanced product and brand experience where customers will have the opportunity to engage with the Cotopaxi product,” says our field marketing manager, Ethan White. To deliver the kind of experience White envisioned, a 20-foot cargo trailer was modified to accommodate products and people. “We created a fold-down wall that turns into a deck—complete with a hydraulic winch system to raise and lower it—along with a swing-out 7-by-7-foot product-display pegboard,” he says. In addition to bringing the physical shopping experience to Questivalers, we’ll also be capturing stories from the road, which will be shared across social channels throughout the year. The Field Store is just beginning its life with the Questival caravan, but don’t be surprised if you see it at music festivals and other events in the near future. Follow our stories from the road at cotopaxi.com/roadwarrior

Do Good T-Shirt - Doing good is in our DNA. It's something that filters through all aspects of Cotopaxi, so we decided to make a shirt to help spread the word. And like all our tees, it's ultrasoft, slightly fitted, and has that broken-in feel, right off the shelf.

Built With Repurpose

Giving new life to leftover fabric.

Throughout our product lines, we repurpose fabric whenever possible. Our factories notify us when they have excess material from a previous project, then we crunch the numbers to see how much fabric we can use for our gear. From there, our team in the Philippines designs and creates products using the remnant fabric, giving new life to that material in the form of limited-edition packs and apparel.

The Luzon, Mariveles, Bataan, Taboche, and all Del Día products are made with repurposed fabric. Learn more at cotopaxi.com/repurposed

On a mission to provide sustainable, traceable down to brands around the world, Allied Down was the perfect supplier to partner with for our products. The Responsible Down Standard (RDS) its team helped implement ensures the down in companies' products comes from animals that have been treated well. This voluntary global standard is audited by independent, third-party auditing bodies, which means brands, retailers, and consumers have the security in knowing the RDS-certified fill inside their products is the highest quality responsibly sourced down available.

Track My Down

To see exactly where the down in your product comes from, and to learn more about its unique properties, Allied has created the innovative traceability tool called trackmydown.com. Climate Control

The Pacaya's blend of insulations works together to control body temperature when you start heating up. Panels of Polartec® Power Stretch® at the underarms kick out the heat, while the Polartec® Alpha® regulates warmth around your core.

In 1981, outdoor apparel was changed for the better when Polartec introduced polar fleece. This synthetic knit became the new standard in what was worn outside, kicking off the company's tireless quest to develop textiles that adapt to Mother Nature's many moods. We're proud to use Polartec's fabrics in our designs, mixing materials to build the most versatile apparel possible.

NEW Pacaya Insulated Jacket (Hoodless)

$179.95 W: XS-XL, 11oz (312g) | M: S-XXL, 13.5oz (383g)

Polartec® Alpha®

Originally developed for the U.S. Special Forces, Polartec® Alpha® regulates core body temperature by helping release excess heat and moisture vapor.

Polartec® Power Stretch®

A highly elastic, breathable fabric, Polartec® Power Stretch® ensures a full range of motion during demanding physical activities.

Bomber Style

The Kusa Bomber is a modern take on the classic flight jacket. It features a 20D ripstop nylon fabric, which is finished with a DWR to create a light, durable, water-resistant outer shell. Below this we applied our unique llama-fiber insulation to keep your core nice and toasty. Ribbed details at the collar, cuffs, and hem round out the bomber, and the reversible design bumps its versatility up a notch. We find it's the perfect casual urban jacket and also a great layer for camping and exploring away from the city.

Alti Insulation™

Llama fiber is woven with polyester filament to create this versatile, lightweight insulation. The blend combines the best attributes of each material, creating a distinct insulating layer that provides warmth in a variety of conditions.

Benefits of llama fiber

Hollow makeup traps warm air

Insulates when wet

Creates natural wind block

Naturally hypoallergenic

New School

Rethinking education in rural Colombia with Cotopaxi Grantee Fundación Escuela Nueva.

words and photos by ambassador JAMES ROH

A winding gravel road leads me past lush rolling hills dotted with modest farmhouses, grazing animals, and rows of potato crops. In the background, low-hanging clouds obscure the true peaks of the enormous Andes. Around a corner I finally find the small one-room school where a horse is tied to the fence. As I approach, two children greet me and usher me inside.

The school is one of many in rural Colombia that has adopted an educational model developed and supported by the nonprofit organization Fundación Escuela Nueva (FEN). In 1987, FEN set out to improve the quality and relevance of education in schools with limited resources by restructuring the way school children learn in the classroom. While FEN has since spread to many countries and several continents, I traveled to Colombia to witness the model in its home country.

Inquisitive students use a globe to locate their home during class.

The classroom is noisy and full of activity—chaotic, even. At each circular table, students are occupied with a variety of activities ranging from drawing to reading to cutting paper. Meanwhile, the teacher casually drifts from one table to another, seemingly not bothered by the madness. At one point, she sits down and sings a song with the children. Plastered on the walls, posters encourage cooperation, peace, values, and teamwork.

As I'd come to learn, this scene is not only normal but is exactly what makes FEN unique and incredibly effective. The FEN model flips the traditional classroom roles and instead uses a child-centered approach that emphasizes creative collaboration and changes the teacher's role from lecturer to facilitator. For students, the school day is no longer sitting and listening. They are now active participants in their own education by taking on leadership roles, creating art projects, producing plays and performances, and voting. Essentially, the students learn how to learn while developing cognitive and social skills. FEN views each child as an agent of change that is crucial for maintaining peace and democracy for the next generation.

Perhaps the most important aspect of the new educational model is its ability to address the needs of students on an individual basis. The teachers are able to adjust the pace for each student, ensuring that no child falls behind or is unchallenged. Instead of singling out students with disabilities, they are integrated into the classroom with the other students. This not only boosts the confidence of the individual student, but allows others to learn respect and acceptance for all.

Every once in a while, the students take a break from their tasks and ask me about myself, where I come from, how to say things in English, and even about the U.S.'s recent elections. Their level of maturity and curiosity is astounding. Then again, just moments before, I laughed as students pinched their noses and made funny faces. I'm not a child-development specialist, but I'd say the students reflect a healthy balance of maturity with, well, normal kid antics.

—Ambassador James Roh traveled to Colombia in November 2016 to visit Cotopaxi grantee Fundación Escuela Nueva. The nonprofit's unique teaching methodology was created for rural Colombian schools with limited resources, but has proven so successful that it has spread to urban schools and numerous other countries.

Above (clockwise): Dana, left, shows me her farm during my stay with her family in Cóbbita. Dana's mother says that the FEN model has inspired her daughter to become more confident and curious about the world.

Juan, 18, sifts through potatoes on his family's farm, despite his dog's best attempt to distract him. Soon to graduate from school, Juan completed his studies using the FEN model and is now preparing to use those skills as an adult and contributing member of his community.

A disabled student cheers alongside her teammates during a school activity. All students are welcomed and included in schools using the FEN model.

Farming is the main livelihood in Cóbbita and many other rural towns where the FEN model was first introduced.

One Shell of a Jacket

The packable, breathable Paray plays defense year-round, blocking the elements wherever you roam. Run, hike, ride, climb, camp—this lightweight shell has you covered.

The Paray has quickly become the single layer that goes everywhere we go. This ultralight shell packs down into its chest pocket for compact travel, yet deploys into an element-blocking fortress at a moment's notice. It's made from a DWR-finished, 20D mini-ripstop nylon, which is exceptionally breathable and works wonders blocking the wind and light precipitation. The athletic fit provides unrestricted mobility, and it's cut to work in conjunction with light layers underneath. An adjustable, tuck-away scuba hood provides additional protection for your neck and head, while elastic binding throughout keeps the Paray in place as you move. An internal chest pocket, dual hand pockets, and internal key pouch offer refuge for your essentials, and logos front and back provide small hits of reflectivity.
